Abstract

Globalization is a reality today. Concerning the situation of Africa, there is a degree of social inequality which we do not want and which indeed is harmful, both to the victims, in many African nations, the human and structural perpetrators of this poverty and indeed entire humanity. The discipline of Business Ethics as a field of teaching, training and research has appeared on the scene, after several negative consequences of unethical global business practices as a panacea, to offer sound principles and elucidate on the fact that the increase in corporate and individual corruption leads to a general decay of society. It is indeed in the interest of all to have a balanced society founded on business practices which are alongside other factors, ethical and therefore sustainable. This contribution is a modest attempt to provide the results of a survey conducted on the sub-Saharan region of West Africa, elucidating on attempts to gain a better understanding of the prevalence and scope of teaching, training, research and methodology related to the field of Business Ethics. The conclusion shows gaps in available centers within the region for study and research on the subject, but portrays the available existence, practice and prevalence within traditional African cultures of values and respect for morality and ethical behaviour generally.

1. Overview of the West Africa sub-region

There are 18 countries in West Africa all of which belong to the Economic Community of West Africa ECOWAS. For practical purposes however, the author was allocated only some 14 countries within the sub region for study. These are Benin, Cameroon, Chad, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Mali, Niger, Nigeria, Sierra Leone and Togo. Other countries within the sub region such as Senegal, Ivory Coast, Mauritania and Burkina Faso were assigned for research under the Central Africa region. Within West Africa, Nigeria is the largest country with a population of over 180 million people. The other countries mentioned provide another 120 million people, making the West Africa region an important and demographically large zone within Africa, with enormous economic, political and natural resources. Nigeria alone has 450 tribes and over 500 independent languages spoken, within one country. The other countries mentioned together provide another 500 languages. The inherent difficulties are already present.

There are major ethnic nationalities and groups who live and thrive beyond State boundaries such as the Hausa, Fulani, Igbo, and Yoruba to mention but a few. Four major European languages are spoken in the zone following Africa's colonial history of the 19th and 20th centuries, namely: English French, Spanish and Portuguese. In the midst of plenty, and in spite of the enormous potentials in human, natural and mineral resources in the West Africa zone, exploitation, bad business practices, lack of good governance and other historical and structural factors have made poverty a reality in the zone. This type of poverty is both scandalous and unacceptable because the major industrial players in the global Oil, Gas and Mineral resources industry rake billions of dollars in profit monthly from the countries of West Africa and with a better business model, life could be better and sustainable for both communities and businesses. Getting the systems working is possible under a motto of sustainable economic development led by socially responsible businesses and individuals in both the public and private sectors.

2. Existing Literature on Business Ethics as a field of Teaching, Training and Research (1990 to 2010)

The existing literature on Business Ethics s field of teaching, training and research consists mainly of a few studies conducted by some erudite scholars who are grounded in this discipline. Far back in 1990, Obiora Ike organized an intercontinental Symposium on Africa and invited scholars, teachers and practitioners from all parts of the continent and beyond to share ideas and thought on the theme of business ethics, responsibility governance and Social thought concerning the future of the continent. A book titled "Catholic Social Teaching en-route in Africa" (1990) emerged as the result of the Symposium and has remained a standard guide for teaching, research and training of Christians and civic society including businesses within Nigeria and beyond on the area of Business Ethics and Christian Social Principles. Other serious works followed which include J. M. Elegido, Professor at the Nigerian Pan-African University, Lagos (the first privately licensed university in Nigeria) and lecturer at the Lagos Business School. His book, "Fundamentals of Business Ethics" (1996) is a pioneer contribution within the West Africa sub – region on the topic and covers the main issues that arise in the field of business ethics both at the corporate levels and at the level of the individual manager. Elegido discusses in detail, the main responsibilities of business firms towards their employees, providers of funds, customers, suppliers, distributors, competitors and the communities in which they work. He further looks at the level of the individual manager and highlights the main responsibilities of business executives towards their firms, paying special attention to the practical implications of the manager's position as fiduciaries. The book by Elegido has been widely used by students and teachers for training in universities across West Africa, particularly in Nigeria as he provides general ethical theory which has special relevance to business ethics.

Peter Alexander Egom has done tremendous research on the area of applying economics as a moral science to the ethical issues of businesses. His research champions a call to inclusive, not exclusive dealings in the world of business at the local, national and international levels. Some of the works of Egom are: NEPAD and the Common Good (2002); Globalization at the Cross-roads-Capitalism and Communalism (2002); Compass for Economic Reform (2008); Economics of Justice and Peace (2007); Economic Mind of God (2007); Global Joseph project (2009), explore the possibility of a universal category for economics understood as business ethics. In Egom's mind, Ethics imposes an obligation on all, including corporations, to use the criteria of faith and morality in the world of business and thereby fulfill the will of God which is the basis of their own salvation.

Obiora Ike has made contributions in Nigeria and beyond to address the subject of Business Ethics from the point of view of applying the light of Christian Social Thought and principles to the discipline of Business Ethics with an array of publications used as classroom texts for training, research and teaching. The key idea is the critical question on whether one could be considered a truly "good Christian" without applying the tenets of Christianity found in the concepts of justice, business ethics and charity to the world of Business in its threefold spheres of the private, public and corporate sectors?. Some of the more applicable works are: "Globalization and African Self-Determination – What is our Future"? (2004); The other books are: "Wende Dein Gesicht der Sonne zu"(2007); "Development is about People, Business is about Ethics" (2003); "Value, Meaning and Social Structure of Human Work and its application to a post-colonial African society" (1986); "Development Strategies and Financial Management of Projects" (1996); "Catholic Social Teaching En-route in Africa" (1990).

Samuel K Bonsu with his contribution on: "Exploring Consumer Ethics in Ghana, West Africa" (2007) and writings in the Journal of Consumer Studies Volume 31, Issue 6 has gone beyond the theories in the USA and Europe to carry out a survey of over 300 Ghanaian consumers and explore their ethical beliefs and judgments. Using regression techniques, the study shows that Ghanaian consumers exhibit lower levels of ethics compared with their American counterparts especially when the unethical actions facilitate the achievement of their goals. While Ghanaian consumers recognize the value of moral rules, they are prone to suspending their ethical positions as they deem necessary in a particular context. Implications for marketing strategy and future research are discussed.

The work by Ndidi Nnoli Edozien, namely: "Ownership and management Structures in the Economy" (2007) was a dissertation submitted to the university of Frankfurt/M in Germany which in turn has become a standard reference material for teachers and research candidates as the work has deepened the linkage between corporate governance to ethical values and Business Ethics. Likewise is the book by Ogbunweze, E.O. which has become a hallmark for the code of conduct for businesses, titled: "Towards an Ethical Ecological Assesment of Companies in Nigeria; an empirical Enquiry into the Frankfurt-Hohenhein Guidelines for the Ethical Assessment of Companies in the Nigerian Context".

Other Literature in the field of Business Ethics are limited to broad and general theories and commentaries on Business Ethics, professional Ethics, sustainability, corporate governance issues and corporate social responsibility. In this regard, mention must be made of the research production titled "Ethics and Sustainability within SME's in sub-Saharan Africa" by M. painter –Morland (2009); "Corporate Ethics in Nigeria" by E.A.Erondu (2004); "Statement of the Nigeria Liquefied Natural Gas (NLNG) on Business Principles and Ethics" and "Total Nigeria's Code of Business Ethics". Other information come from Internet search results which show a galaxy of material dealing with 'Teaching Business Ethics through Literature'; 'CSR in Africa'; 'A review of corporate Governance in African literature' and a work on 'Business Ethics in Nigeria' (2000); Even the Dubai based Trade Magazine "Business Guide" which is a feature has a production titled: 'Business Ethics in Africa' and carries out in-depth analysis of the rapid changes sweeping through many African countries, a large portion of which is the West Africa sub-region. It is worthy to note that Business Ethics has not been a generalized teaching field in many African nations. Research results show that only a few countries (all English speaking), offered Business Ethics as a course of study in their higher institutions or specialized centers of learning. These countries are: South Africa (which has continued to lead on the subject, content and expanse of both courses and teachers involved in the field of Business Ethics); Uganda, Nigeria, Kenya, Ghana and Egypt all in that order. One observation is the fact that the subject was not generally taught in countries of French speaking (Francophone) Africa, and where they existed at all, such courses were offered by private universities and institutions, often, Christian Universities of the Catholic denomination.

3. Specific Methodological Considerations

The methodological considerations adapted in this research work include that of desktop searches, survey questionnaire; personal contacts achieved through meetings, travels, phone calls and Email exchanges. Review of related literature, oral conversations and discussions with individuals who are either practitioners or have information necessary to the subject of research. Data were however collected from both online database and open resources. Individuals of interest in issues related to business ethics, but of limited literary capabilities were also resourceful in their contributions to the subject of research.

However, research identified individuals who put in a reasonable amount of their time in discussing issues concerning business ethics and in publication of articles in business ethics journals or Institutions which have modules and offer elective or mandatory courses. Furthermore, research identified other related fields of learning which are factually helpful in discussing business ethical conducts in the sub-region. About 50 volunteers collaborated within the sub region with the research through networking of individuals at different points. They offered invaluable help towards this research project. It is worthy of note to state that the contributions of these individuals were oral. These oral traditions could impose limitations due to illiteracy of the western languages of interview such as French and English writing and communication. But their contributions are very helpful since they give an experiential account based on knowledge and involvement at the local levels of the market activities where the concepts and issues in business ethics are practically expressed.

4. Findings

The findings of this research show the existence and prevalence of Business Ethics ideas in traditional and culturally rooted African thought patterns. These are embedded in the local philosophies and wisdoms of the people and in the cultures and cultural patterns of the indigenous tribes of West Africa. Education may be acquired through schools in modern societies, but many African peoples, who did not and do not attend these koranic or western-style classroom education systems, acquired knowledge and character through traditional models and educational methods. Such traditional value education was founded on lifestyles that were respectful of creation and environment, of the elders and of traditional institutions and the norms of society. Such value education was also found in the manner of behavior, dressing, moral values, respect for traditional persons and institutions alongside recognizing the impact and enormous role of religion in their daily lives. Oral interviews revealed that many of the language groups, tribes and ethnic nationalities in the West Africa sub-region have a concept of the market, monetary transactions, agreements, justice, truth, integrity and business ethics around which were built local proverbs and religious moral norms. For a person to be respected within the community, one must be respectful of the traditions left behind by the ancestors, conveyed through culture, language, art, dance and religious symbols and values. Therefore, persons in the local communities were expected to live a life of integrity and respect within the family, the clan, the village and the larger society. To behave contrary was a disgrace to the community and was often met with stiff punishment.

Irrespective of what has been said of the existence of morality and general Business Ethical ideas in traditional society, there is of course, the scientific discipline around the subject which is carried out at the universities and educational centers of higher learning, including specialized institutions which offer Business Ethics as a tool for learning, teaching and research. Our findings reveal the universities existent on the West Africa sub region, thus: Nigeria 147; Ghana 13; Guinea Bissau 4; Liberia 9; Mali 9; Chad 2; Benin Republic 4; Sierra Leone 2; Gambia 1; Niger Republic 2; Cameroon 13; Equatorial Guinea 2; Togo 2; Many of these universities do not offer specialized courses on the topic of Business Ethics as an independent discipline. Observations however show that these institutions generally offer Courses in General Studies at the university level for all students on the topics of philosophy, religion and ethics but not necessarily the theme of Business Ethics as a particular field of study, research and training. The institutions that offer specific study on Business Ethics as a field of Teaching, Training and Research are often private universities, Christian specialized institutions and Seminary Institutes. Hardly does any State funded public institution offer Business Ethics as Course of study with deepened reflection and academic proficiency in the West Africa sub-region.

4.1. Terminology and Conceptualization of Business Ethics

Terminology and conceptualization of business ethics, prevalence and distribution of business ethics in the region, focus areas in business ethics, themes in teaching in business ethics, themes in training in business ethics, themes in research in business ethics and the major business ethical issues in the region are the requirements for consideration under this under this sub-section. Fact however is, as has already been mentioned initially, that the conceptualization of Business Ethics as a specialized field of teaching, training and research in universities and institutions in the West African sub-region is novel and limited. Likewise, there is only a handful of lecturers who are active on the subject of business ethics as can be seen in the list of some of the persons engaged with, teach or research the subject in this sub-region

The idea of ethics in this sub-region is factually existent, as they are found in the thought patterns, language, practices and moral beliefs of the people. People talk of ethics, business ethics and financial ethically behaviors in their everyday lives with respect to ought-ness, duty and responsibility. Stealing and cutting corners are disregarded and morally reprehensible. The idea of justification of acts, the rightness or wrongness on issues, work, transactions, contracts, buying and selling are so pronounced in the daily affairs of the people. This could be seen from the angle that most of the West African countries are traditionally inclined to the concept of what is good as to be done and what is evil as to be avoided. Issues are in most cases attributed to some spiritual or supernatural forces, which in turn influence their day to day activities. And as such, ethics including business ethics comes into play in all that people do.

There is evidence from the survey that a terminology such as business ethics is minimally used in some countries in the sub-region while a good number of tongues and languages in the sub-region refer to other terms that are related to business ethics. Prominent in Ike (1993) are concepts like ezi onu ahia (good market price), ahia oma na ere onwe ya (good market sells itself), egbe bere ugo bere (win-win scenario is best strategy; let the kite perch and let the eagle perch too); I bu nkem, abum nke gi (inclusion, not exclusion; you are mine and I am your) Nwa ka ego (a child is more valuable than money); Afam efuna (my name is worth more than wealth); Nwa m kwuba aka gi oto (My child be fair, ethical and just). There are other concepts in the Northern Hausa speaking areas of West Africa including Chad, Niger, Northern Cameroon, northern Ghana and Burkina Faso which say: kasua mai chau (A good business; A good market). It is observed that business ethics as a term is still growing in its specific understandings in the region.

This could be attributed to the gradual growth and introduction of the concepts of business ethics in the scientific study of higher learning. Thus, the issue of conceptualization of business ethics in this sub-region has a great potential in view of the influx of ideas from all parts of the world, which confront traditional and indigenous knowledge for which the transfer of knowledge and exchange across cultures is important. It is this formulation of ideas or birth-giving to fresh thoughts that should help improve or advance business ethics in the West African sub-region. The implications are as follows:

1. Business ethics is enveloping within the sub-region as a specialization.
2. There are a limited number of teachers for the course and the discipline.
3. The institutions that teach business ethics are also limited in number, and as such, rather than do Business ethics specifically, they engage in the wider spectrum of ethics studies including economic ethics, social ethics, media ethics, and other forms of ethical studies under philosophy and theology which are in some form business ethics though not strictly addressed.

4.2. Prevalence and distribution of Business Ethics in West Africa

Business ethics in the sub-region of West Africa from the findings of this research is not prevalent, nor is it eloquently pronounced. It is also not widely spread as one may expect it, knowing fully well that in traditional culture and thought patterns, the values and issues of business ethics had priority place in the business milieu of people and was generally acknowledged. In modern society however, the sampled opinion of some of our contacts is that they hear more of issues of business ethics at the levels of discussions on Enron, Shell, Chevron, Banks, Big Business and Multinational discussions. Business Ethics does not seem to convey the idea of simple honest behaviors that teach virtue and character. Students confront the concept only in the classrooms and at higher university levels. Since State owned and public universities do not offer courses on Business Ethics as a specialization, students who were interviewed claimed ignorance of its existence. The prevalence and distribution in West Africa is thus low. The cities where big corporations exist have a better chance to develop content around the topic of business ethics unlike locations where big businesses do not exist.

Students do not offer to study business ethics in universities because it is not offered and it is not generally public knowledge. Many stated that if it was offered and known, they would be glad to study the subject as it flows into their concepts of morality and religious values. Research also showed that few teachers share their knowledge on this subject matter with their students because the teachers themselves are not specialized and not tutored. Let it be said that Business Ethics is generally found in persons seeking post graduate studies who already possess their first degrees and seek to obtain a second or higher degree such as the masters. Often, it is difficult to find students desiring to carry out research at the first degree level in the subject of Business Ethics. Candidates for Business Ethics in many of the countries under study are rather persons who are graduates. This study shows the prevalence, distribution and participation of individual teachers and institutions in Business Ethics as a course of study within the sub region, thus:

- Benin Republic: There are four universities in the country. But none of these universities offer courses on Business Ethics as an elective subject. Such course is only offered by the Institute of Justice, Development and Peace run under Father Raymond Goudjo, German trained Director of the Institute. The centre conducts practical theoretical and practical courses in Business Ethics. The Catholic University of West Africa has a faculty in Cotonou, although the headquarters for the sub-region of this regional university is in Abidjan, the Ivory Coast.
- Cameroon, which has 9 Universities, only the Catholic University of Central Africa Located Yaoundé teaches and offers Business Ethics in its curriculum as a subject for research and training. And this is happening in a country which is described and rated by Transparency International on their Index as the most corrupt country in the world. In Cameroon, public universities do not offer Business Ethics as a discipline. The undergraduates only take some elective courses in the areas of philosophy, management and social sciences and administrative courses.
- Chad, one of the poorest countries in the Sahel regions of Africa with a predominantly Muslim population has been embroiled in intermittent wars within and without for the past 20 years, making it virtually impossible for development to take place. Even though it established a University in 1971, located in N'Djamena the capital of the Saharan country with affiliations to the National School of Administration and the National Institute, there is complete absence of the topic and subject of Business Ethics at any level. Mandatory Courses in social studies and administration are offered as part of the curriculum of studies.
- Equatorial Guinea, a Spanish speaking country has 2 Universities with no business ethics as a field of study or research, teaching or training in any of them. During the course of this research, I visited this small Island country, richly endowed but ruled by a maximum dictator for life who is virtually in charge of everything, businesses, lives and resources. With a very small size and population, Malabo its headquarters is a tourist developing centre, richly endowed with oil wealth, spread unevenly, thus the need for the inculcation of business ethics in its culture and society both for the foreign multinationals drilling oil in that country and the citizens, especially the youth.

- The Gambia, located on the shores of the Atlantic on the south and bounded by Senegal on the other three sides is a highly populated Muslim country on the West Coast, a tourist destination in West Africa. The subject of Business Ethics is not taught in any institution. During my visit to this country during the conduct of this research, I was able to visit the only university in the country, located in Kanifing, south of Banjul and operating since 1996 and started with funding from the Islamic Development Bank. Business Ethics as a course of teaching does not exist on the curriculum of studies of this only university of the Gambia. There are large numbers of promising young lads who would benefit from school education but poverty and lack of access remains a great handicap in this nearly water and land locked country. There are not sufficient teachers to offer the basic subjects of business ethics and many students do not have knowledge that such a subject exists. The university is still young and facing infrastructural needs. Nationals of other countries take over this responsibility. It is however a promising land with development potentials if properly harnessed within an environment of good governance and democratic ideals that respect universal principles and guarantee basic freedoms, human rights and global dividends.
- Ghana is a culturally rooted country with great potentials of human, material and natural resources within the sub region of West Africa. A country with a population of over 20 million persons, 6 public universities, 7 professional institutions; one regional university and 9 private universities, Ghana has all it takes to be prolific and efficient in the discipline of Business Ethics as a field of study and research. On the topic of Business Ethics, Ghana some Universities and higher institutions of strong business ethics institutes such as the courses both elective and compulsory at the University of Ghana, Legon where the GIMPA is also situated; The Catholic University College of Ghana offers courses on Catholic Social Thought and Business Ethics as part of its philosophy and religious courses. Other universities which carry out specific studies in the area under discussion are the Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology, Kumasi ; University of Cape Coast , Cape Coast University of Education and the Winneba University for Development Studies. The Christian Service University College of Ghana, Fiapre, Sunyani and some other Christian oriented private University faculties offer basic studies on the subject of ethics and religion.

- Guinea with just one university recently opened in 2007 is still grappling with infrastructural development, governance issues and need for professionals to manage its curriculum and programs at Conakry, the capital city. The subject of Business Ethics is not available on its timetable yet.
- Guinea Bissau, which speaks Portuguese, the language of its former colonial rules, namely Portugal has over four universities. The Amilcar Cabral University - since 2008 suspended for three years in that country; The University of Colinas de Boe; The University Lusofona, an extension of the Portuguese university bearing the same name; and the Jean Plaget university. The subject of Business Ethics as a field of study, teaching and research is virtually absent.
- Liberia has one of the oldest universities of Africa, founded in 1862 as the Liberia College under the United States of America and later becoming a fully independent university in 1951. The University of Liberia is a publicly funded institution of higher learning located in Monrovia, Liberia. With five Colleges, three professional Schools and three graduate Programs, the College of Business and public Administration offers general courses on ethics, religion and business studies. Liberia has just emerged from a destructive and damaging war which effect still lingers to this day. There are great chances for the field of Business Ethics as a subject for teaching, research and training.
- Mali, a majorly Muslim populated country has the world's first and oldest university located at Timbuktu and founded in the 11th century during the height of the reign of the great Alhaji Mansa Kankan Musa of the famous historical Mali Empire. It was founded an Islamic centre of learning and has remained so till date. In the present times, another university has been constructed at Bamako, the country's capital city. Surely, the Islamic university trains students in various professions and graduates them for the challenge for today. It did not show from our studies that the subject of Business Ethics is offered to the students nor do the teachers have the training, research and expertise in the subject.
- Niger Republic has one university known as the Islamic university of the Niger which has no course on the subject of Business Ethics. The country is hard hit by the Sahel regions bad weather and the Sahara desert has engulfed it completely. Much effort is spent, trying to develop the county despite natural disasters and difficulties. The subject of Business Ethics is absent, even though, there is a study of Islamic culture and religion connotations, there is the study of the Koran and the Surah and the Hadith of the Prophet.

- Nigeria is the largest and richest country in West Africa and the most populated black nation on earth. With a population estimated at over 180 million people, Nigeria has about 147 Universities, and only recently in 2011, another 9 Federal Universities was licensed by the Federal Government. There are over 40 Private Universities in the country; many of them owned by Christian denominations, Church groups, individual and private interests of different persuasions. The private universities offer courses on the subject and discipline of Business Ethics with curriculum, content, research themes, training and teaching staff. The Pan-African University in Lagos was the first privately licensed university in Nigeria with linkage to the Catholic Church. It has the best organizational and capacity structures for research, training and research and teaching. The Lagos Business School is also another institution that does training for personnel of banks, firms, organizations, government top staff, management cadres and civil and political leadership of the country. The Catholic Institute for Development, Justice, Peace and Caritas (CIDJAP) founded in 1986 in Enugu sets itself to address the need for filling the gap in society by training middle and top persons in the areas of Social Ethics, Business ethics, Political Ethics, Economic Ethics, Cultural Ethics and other areas of professional Ethics. Furthermore, the Catholic Institute carries its training beyond its doors to institutions, persons and groups outside through animation, training workshops, weekend seminar and engagement of civil society to focus on issues of the environment, ecology and climate change, the international debt question; the trade in arms and narcotics; prostitution and child trafficking to mention but a few. CIDJAP works through theory and practice and partners with affiliate institutions such as the newly established Godfrey Okoye University, a private Catholic institution of the Diocese of Enugu. There has been some form of Islamic ethics and business ethics at the Bayero University in Kano, northern Nigeria. The Growing Businesses Foundation in Lagos (2000) initiated by one of Nigeria's leading female voices, Ndidi Nnoli-Edozien engages in dialogue with conglomerates doing businesses in Nigeria, challenging them to the issues of the Corporate Governance Function, sustainability and Corporate Social Responsibility. The University of Nigeria, Nsukka, and other private and a few public universities such as in Lagos, the Enugu University of Science and technology which as a Business School and the university of Ibadan have strong input on the topic of Business Ethics as a field of learning, training and research in Nigeria.

- Sierra Leone has two universities namely, the Fourah Bay College which is today the University of Sierra Leone and the Njala University, established as a Public institution by the Universities Act of 2005. After the war which ravaged the country, effects of the war has made it practically impossible for any meaningful engagement with studies on Business Ethics, although the country is involved in the large scale production and mining of mineral resources such as Gold and Diamond which make it a haven for criminals, smugglers and multinational firms who often do not pay tax and engage in unethical conduct.
- Togo, a small country in West Africa has continued quietly to gain from its British and German colonial history through sustaining an environment of peace to ensure progress and development. There are two universities, namely: the University of Lome and the newly created Catholic University of Togo, an affiliate of the larger catholic University of West Africa, owned and managed by all the catholic Bishops of the Francophone countries in West Africa. The subject of Business Ethics is not fully developed, but is approached from the point of view of ethics and management of society.

4.3. Focus Areas in Business Ethics

Business ethics in this sub-region focuses on a variety of issues that border on meaning and the ethical justification of the day to day encounter or transaction in which people see themselves day after day. There are some areas that have been seen as the areas of concern by people that do business ethics in the sub-region of West Africa. These areas include:

1. Social responsibility in the management of business;
2. Corporate governance;
3. Corporate compliance and ethics;
4. Public sector governance;
5. Ethics and employees;
6. Corporate social responsibility.
7. Work Ethics
8. Traditional legal reasoning and business rationality

In these areas, the scholars of business ethics reflect on issues bordering on the justification of business, the moral rightness or wrongness of some business transactions which are seen harmful to the human person.

4.4. Themes in Training and Business Ethics

The themes that have been developed in training and Business Ethics in the West Africa sub region focus on exploring the role of Businesses in the development of a nation. Sustainable economic development must be led by socially responsible businesses and persons. Only through this means can the topics of good governance and democratic ideals have an impact on the concrete lives of people. Business education in public and private Universities and institutions is critical and the position of the faith-based organizations is to consider Business as a calling.

Themes for training in Business Ethics include issues of sustainability; subsidiarity and solidarity issues; the role and protection of the African family in the Business; the protection of women and youth from exploitation; the prevention of war and the promotion of peace and dialogue; corporate governance; the role of labour in promoting a dignified human existence; community and businesses relations as in the Niger Delta regions and in the mineral and oil producing countries to promote better understanding between indigenes and business concerns; between nature and nurture; between governments and their people so that business concerns do not harm and exploit people. This involves a more proactive method of conflict prevention, management and resolution where they occur. Themes in the training in Business Ethics shall also include the proper understanding and centrality of the human person in the world of Business since all economic and technological discoveries and practice must remain at the service of the human person and not make man a slave of his or her products.

4.5.Themes in Business Ethics Research

- The major themes in Business Ethics research are Corporate Governance which involves the proper role and model of distinguishing competencies and driving an organization without conflict of interest and under clear division of labour.
- Employment issues and the management of employer and employee confrontation.
- Traditional social-market economy in a global environment, whereby inclusive and not exclusive economic practices hold sway;
- Granting access to the voiceless and the poor so that this world would be governed by win-win scenarios and the poor retain their dignity.
- Family values in the world of Business;
- The care for creation and environmental protection;
- The youth and growing issues of unemployment;

4.6.Major Business Ethical Issues over the next 5 years

There are key issues which shall engage Business Ethics in the next five years in West Africa some of which shall be the urgent matters of linking business with society for harmonious living together. Globalization has set in with its major agenda to break down barriers. It brings a lot of good things to humanity but sets in also challenges which humanity must face collectively and individually.

1. Environment and Justice Issues over natural resources and resources Control;
- 2, Employment and work related issues;
3. Management and ownership and the corporate Governance function;
- 4, International business practices in African countries and corporate social responsibility and investments;
5. Terrorism, security issues, cross border trading in arms and drugs;
6. Business as a good servant promoting the common good and human dignity;
7. The management and use of the means of modern communication, the media and the tools of the ICT.

5. Conclusion

We cannot wish away nor do Businesses without a rational manner that offers a level playing ground and respects human dignity, respects ownership and private property, promotes family values, encourages and asserts the rights of individuals and communities, protecting them from exploitation, bad laws and big businesses that have grown bigger than nations and persons. Ultimately, what matters is happiness and human beings must be served by businesses. Business Ethics therefore emerges as a moment and platform for change and inclusion of human values in the way companies, corporations, governments, individuals and people manage their affairs, relate to the environment, control and manage resources and create an environment for peace, prosperity and development for all. The language of Business Ethics is inclusion, not exclusion.

Worldwide, humanity has experienced recent historical developments captured under the theme of globalization. Globalization has led in our times to communities, cultures and nations fast becoming united in ways and through means which had hitherto been thought to be impossible. The coming together of the various groups takes place not only through economic mergers, political integration, trade agreements and the like but also through the use of recent technological discoveries. Globalization has its advantage; their pitfalls are also apparent. In the African setting, many have pondered on the overall effect of this phenomenon on the peoples and cultures of the continent. Business Ethics is about sustainability. Short term sacrifices lead to long term gain. Sacrifices are only made, voluntarily for goals and ideals we believe in, and when we have confidence in those who may lead us there. Leadership therefore, become ever more important in this agenda for changing Africa's negative image, whether through the media or by those other levels involved in managing human affairs, the centers of social academic, cultural and political changes in the west and elsewhere.

Our conclusion is a statement that recommends:

- Further collaboration and increase in the activities of those who are engaged as teachers, trainers and students and who work around the theme of Business Ethics as practitioners to continue this work more closely in the West Africa sub-region and globally.

- That universities in the West Africa sub-region increase their curriculum and content of teaching, research and training to ensure that future students are instructed fully in the wisdom of Business Ethic for a better society.
- That inter-university journals, symposia and workshops be organized to increase the awareness and urgent necessity of the discipline of Business Ethics amongst all levels of society including the big global business players; communities; governments; individuals, civil society groups and faith based organizations.
